

YOU ARE IN THE BURN ZONE

A cloud of toxic hydrofluoric gas with a 19-mile radius.

That's the nightmare scenario for 1.5 million people who live and work in the Twin Cities—a nightmare that's closer to reality than it needs to be.

Why are we in danger?

Because Marathon Petroleum, owners of the St. Paul Park refinery and Speedway gas stations, cares more about profits than Minnesotans' lives. To save a buck, corporate executives are using unfamiliar, untrained, out-of-state workers without any connection to the community or familiarity of the facility to run the refinery.

Why does it matter?

This is our home. We are the workers who have the training, skills, and familiarity to run the Marathon Petroleum refinery. But because we demanded that Marathon use our skilled labor instead of out-of-town contract workers, corporate executives locked us out from our jobs in January. Without us there, our friends, our families, our neighbors, and our entire community is in the chemical burn zone of some of the most dangerous chemicals on the planet.

Find out if you and your family are in the burn zone.
